question for you, my religous friend...

Well, I'm not that religious, but OK.

Scott Esk
would you be for putting homosexuals to death, as it was commended in the OT?

No, because we're under grace, not under the law. Why? Who's advocating that?

Scott Esk
well, I put in a good word for it being wothy of death in NT times For Romans 1

Put in a good word where?

Scott Esk
where do they meet? i've not heard of them.

Topoka Kansas. They're the God Hates Fags, Thank God for Dead Soldiers busch.

Scott Esk
you'd have to check out the threat, John, but yeah, I'm sure there would be some who would make that jump in logic.

That's not a jump in logic.
We're under grace now, and nowhere in the NT are we commended to use the power of government to force the laws of God on people beyond the protection of life, liberty and property.

Scott Esk
well, I don't ever say anything like God hates fags, and I'm against the military being used to promote the NWO, but I'm not for dead soldiers either. That would be a big misrepresentation.

Out if you say you don't have a problem with putting them to death for being fags, that's out there, bro.

Scott Esk 11:00:08
Do you have a prob with them being put to death in Ancient Israel?

...We're not ancient Israel. That's what radical theocrats don't get.

Scott Esk 11:00:00
Do you think it was wrong, though, John, to have them put to death in AD?

...That's what God told them to do back then. However, Israel was a theocracy under God. The US today isn't. Rebelious children were put to death, too.

Scott Esk 11:00:14pm
Can you imagine the rock piles in America if we re-enacted that all over the country?

...Right
Working on Saturday was also punishable by death.

Scott Esk 11:00:13pm
right - rescuing an animal or something like that wasn't, but yeah, regular work was strictly prohibited under penalty of death.

...So are we under the law or grace?

Scott Esk 11:00:13pm
the Bible says we are, I think in John 1

...And if under grace, who are we to decide -- excepting for sins which violate the basic tenets of life, liberty and property -- which sins we're going to make capital crimes?
Drunkness?
Economic malfeasance?
The fact of the matter is, those who try to mix the law and grace are full of spiritual pride, and arguing with them is basically like arguing with a jackass. He doesn't listen and keeps braying the same old thing over and over.

Scott Esk 11:00:08pm
I'm mostly concerned about things that are abominations in both the OT & NT

5 So too, at the present time there is a remnant chosen by grace. 6 And if by grace, then it cannot be based on works; if it were, grace would no longer be grace.

Scott Esk 11/29, 10:26am

I take that to refer to spiritual things, and true, there's no way a man can earn his way to Heaven by his own good works.

Scott Esk 11/29, 10:26am

If it helps any, John, I'm certainly not for enforcing standards of morality by punishment in any way but through legal means (I'm not a vigilante), and in the current moral climate, authoring a bill to restore the death penalty for perversion between consenting adults would be very counter-productive in the foreseeable future.

Scott Esk 11/29, 10:26am

In Gen 9:6, it mentions paying for a life taken with one's own life, so authorizes the death penalty. I don't think the morality system developed in the OT has been abolished, and we have authorization to enforce the death penalty in whatever we think is appropriate. I think a crime that "pollutes the land" should be right up there, but I don't see it gaining traction any time soon. I certainly don't bring it up as any of my priorities on people's front porches.

Adam Bates But what's that have to do with what the Pope is saying? He's not saying anything about the morality, but about his fitness to judge others. If it's God's judgment you're on about, then let God impose it, don't usurp that authority for yourself.

Adam Bates I also think it's pretty safe to assume that the Pope has read the scriptures a time or two, and that this is not simply an oversight on the Padre's part.

Adam Bates You didn't answer my question. Anybody can just regurgitate scripture, but we're talking about the Pope here. And the scripture you're quoting isn't even relevant to the issue. The Pope isn't commenting on the morality of homosexual behavior, he's commenting on the morality of usurping God's role as the ultimate judge.

So find the verses in the New Testament that speak to whether we should judge each other.

Further, if this is just about "derr, scripture says it's bad," then why don't social conservatives spread all this same bile about divorce? Or non-marital sex? Or covetousness? Or war? Or violence?

If you're going to be a fire and brimstone Christian then be one about everything, don't just pick on the gays.

Scott Esk Adam asked about fitness to judge others. That right was given in verses like Lev 20:13. Men were commanded to put guilty parties to death who were guilty of certain acts, like homosexuality. Laws to put people to death who were guilty of such practices have been in existence in various countries in Jesus' time and afterwards, too. If men wink at such perversions, God may have no choice than to judge such nations with calamities.

Scott Esk I think we would be totally in the right to do it. That goes against some parts of libertarianism, I realize, and I'm largely libertarian, but ignoring as a nation things that are worthy of death is very remiss.

Lyndsay Marie It's people like Scott who blindly quote selected verses of the Bible that make me happy that this country was NOT founded with Christianity as the state religion (although some religious nuts insist otherwise).

But then again, I'm a woman, so I'm sure people like Scott would throw 1 Timothy 2:12 at me: "I do not permit a woman to teach or to assume authority over a man; she must be quiet." Please excuse me while I go laugh myself into tears.

Adam Bates That doesn't just go against "some parts of Libertarianism," it's a rejection of everything Libertarianism stands for. Murdering people for engaging in consensual behavior based on some guy's religious interpretations tears the heart out of any concept of individual liberty.

What you just said is every bit as vile as the worst beliefs of the worst Islamic radical. That's the real irony here: the authoritarian Christian Nationalists and the authoritarian Islamist nationalists set themselves up as opposing forces, but when it comes to their conception of freedom and morality they're in fact the exact same people.

Qadoshyah Fish The Pope is in a position of leadership and 'church' authority and has the right (and actually must do) before God to condemn someone who acts in such a way (1 Cor. 6:9-10). Not to condemn them for eternity, but to speak the issue at hand. Of course, if that homosexual repents and turns from their sin (of homosexuality), then they can be saved. But, Matthew 7 tells Christians to judge with righteous judgement. That is not destining who goes to Heaven or Hell. It's just speaking the truth of the moment - if such a person continues in this path, they will end up in Hell. This is just one more example that shows the Pope is not a true teacher (John 10).

Nicholas Vest It's funny how often Homosexuality is discussed among Christians. It's masturbation mostly, as I don't think there is a large number of Homosexuals glued to the news waiting for Christian leadership to announce that they're accepted. In fact, I'd say that most of the Homosexuals who give a damn what the church thinks probably ARE among the leadership. This is totally biased opinion from me with no sources or evidence to back it up, mind you. Gays be like, "I hope God is okay with all this", lol.

Ralyn Sue Speerly Schraceo I'm not Catholic, nor do I agree with a lot of Catholic beliefs. The Bible states pretty clearly that effeminates (gays, cross-dressers & transgenders) will not earn a place in Heaven - but it doesn't just stop there, it also includes adulterers, fornicators and more. I Cor: 9-10

However, I don't think God would be very happy if you denied somebody learning about his Word and repenting just because you think they are a sinner.

July 29, 2013 at 2:37pm · Like

Scott Esk If it helps any, I consider it a violation of federalism to deal with such things on a national level, and different states will have different laws on the matter. I would hope that libertarians who don't think perversion should be punished in any way between consenting adults would be open-minded and look at the different results between a state that ignores it, and 1 that punishes it severely. And within a state, cities and communities may well have different policies, and I cheer that. That way, people can decide for themselves whether they want to live in a particular community based in part on how things like this are dealt with.

Rudi Soliz The brilliant part is that Pope Francis is saying nothing new. Love the sinner and hate the sin; any Catholic who has read the Catechism know this. The ignorant reactions people are having say more about those who think they know what Catholics believe rather than what the Catholic Church believes.

Craig J. Bolton Scott, I think that your rules of hermeneutics are probably a bit simplistic. You might want to look into this more deeply if your goal is to "live by the scriptures."

Scott Esk To clarify another thing or 2, Guys, I'm not for vigilante 'justice' or hating people. The Bible tells us to love our neighbor as ourselves, and to hate every false way. I will never try to harm anybody unless he tries to harm me 1st, and I perceive that my life or family or property are in danger. And there is little support for re-instating the death penalty for perversions involving consenting adults. Please educate me on this one, Adam and others, what do you think should be the punishment for a victimful crime like pedophilia? I just want to see the thought process.
